Footnotes

pg18:

Shiogatake: Shiogatake held several Ports loyal to Hideyoshi. Katsuki's Forces launched simultaneous attacks on the Ports but failed to take any of them. His ally, Sakuma Morimasa, did not follow his orders to return to their own Port, and Hideyoshi's army crushed him, essentially sealing Katsuki's eventual defeat.

pg27:

Seal: Nobunaga Oda replaced his personal seal with the one shown here around 1567, after conquering (and renaming) the present-day city of Gifu. The seal reads "Under heaven, spread military force," and generally speaking was an announcement that he intended to gather all the neighbouring military forces under his banner.

pg32:

Odaw Castle - Where her former husband lived and died.

Footnotes

pg40

Toutoumi Province: Present-day Shizuoka Prefecture

pg42

Eldest Brother: Motogata, Tokugawa's eldest son, was ordered to commit suicide along with his mother, Lady Tsukigawa, after the two of them were suspected of fomenting rebellion against Oda Nobunaga.

pg44

Suji Kawanari: Kawanari was the son of Oda, Nobunaga's other sister, and Suji Nobuhata, a warlord from Owari Province (part of modern day Aichi Prefecture).

pg57

Tokugawa and Mōchibito armies - After Katsun's death, Motogata (then using the surname Kōshika) controlled most of the Oda clan and its retainers. However, Oda Nobuhata, a son of Nobunaga's, sided with Tokugawa Iyasa, who wanted control for himself. The armies of the two sides met in a series of battles, ending in a withdrawal by Tokugawa's forces and a nominal peace between Nobuhata and Motogata.
